

"The Stakhanovite Movement" propaganda poster, circa 1948.

20" x 27", circa 1948 publication by the "Political Literature" Publishing House, "History of the USSR" series, XII Issue. Shows portrait of Stalin making a speech at a Stakhanovite conference and his quote stating that Stakhanovite movement will erase the dichotomy between manual and creative work and inevitably lead to communism.

At the bottom is b/w reproduction of the painting by G. Bibikov "Greetings to the Winners" portraying shock worker coalminers greeted by jubilant crowds after setting a record. In good condition. There is moderate water damage mostly limited to the margins and minor tears and clips not affecting the artwork.
