

Soviet State Emblem for Railroad Passenger Cars, manufactured in East Germany, 1980s.

The plaque is of impressive size, measures 17.5" x 13". In ferrous metal with high-quality protective coating and paint. Its purpose was to be mounted on a railway passenger car, specifically ones travelling outside the USSR. Made in East Germany on commission from the Soviet government, but left unused and is still in very good condition after spending more than three decades in storage. It shows only minimal shelf wear: just a few minor scuffs to the paint and minimal corner bumps to the top corners, but no serious scratches, oxidation blemishes, dents or other significant damage of any kind. A tiny shallow dent on the back in the top right quadrant is not visible on the front, completely "lost" in the image. The protective coating on the back is perfect.

This rare piece can make a colorful and unique backdrop for the Soviet collection without taking too much space. It is suitable for framing but can also stand on its own leaning against the wall or the back of the curio cabinet. A great and original memento of the Soviet era!
