

Red Army Tank Commanders: the Armored Guards, by Richard Armstrong.

Hard covered, 476 pages, 9"x6", 1 1/4" thick, English text. 15 black-and-white photos, maps.

The book profiles commanders who rose to lead six Soviet tank armies during WW 2: Katukov, Rybalko, Efimov, Lelyushenko, Rotmistrov, and Kravchenko. The emphasis is on their military careers and battle tactics employed in major operations.

Item# 2459

$22.00

Contents
	Preface	6
	Introduction	13
Chapter I	Katukov	33
Chapter II	Bogdanov	101
Chapter III	Rybalko	161
Chapter IV	Lelyushenko	239
Chapter V	Rotmistrov	303
Chapter VI	Kravchenko	383
	Conclusion	455
	Bibliography	466
	Index	471

Dmitri Danilovich Lelyushenko (right).

cavalry to a chief of the became a tank in command. Major Military I should be a stressing the winter with snow he developed officers. army reg ranges in tank com hicles. T and for through cusing. Toti mander listing, sonal p open, T concise is boili. In comm marly edly to brigad the So tank l tion o in cor one R mark adva hard levels in the famed First Cavalry Army of General Semyon Budyenny. With the Cavalry Army, he fought against White Guards around Rostov, the anarchist guerrilla leader, Nestor I. Makhno, and other white Russian regiments in the Crimea. He received the Order of the Red Banner for personal bravery in combat around the towns of Dublyany and Berestechko in 1920. In five years of the Russian Civil War, Rybalko received 14 combat wounds, sustaining severe injuries which would stay with him for life.

Pavel Semenovich Rybalko

Like many new commissars, Rybalko shifted from political affairs to military actions, commanding the 80th Cavalry Regiment, 1st Brigade, 14th Cavalry Division. Participating in a major offensive operation against Polish forces in the Russo-Polish War, on 20 June 1920, he led his unit in overcoming a stubborn Polish defense in a savage engagement for Novograd-Volynsk. The victorious battle, however, became lost in the greater Red Army defeat in war.

Between 1926 and 1931, Rybalko received military schooling in the Red Army Military Academy, a course for improving higher command staffs. In a short interlude to his military education he served as commander and commissar for a cavalry regiment and brigade. In 1931, he studied at the Frunze Military Academy, graduating three years later. After brief service as the assistant commander in a mountain-cavalry Chinese cav in Manchur as a milita Warsaw at 1939, Rybal Polish citi Rybalko's have saved 1937-38. I to the pur Major Gen The C while Ryf courses, a offered a ties, such brigade ( nician. S armored the tank well as from hi By May mainly ally in arrived The co wood planu units) Uj with t diated mand briga comp tion After drive the elite armored Divisions, atten Steadily adv 18th Tank Corp tion in three ec flank towards l strike and secu But, the sit ing. Rotmistro lages in the ne tack to the no south of Prok On instruction gades of the Simultaneous Guards Tank By midda became obvic flitting heavy little territory advance alon man armorec ken. The 18th the village A brigade, ove and Adolf F Brigades of t Reich, attac Belenikhino the 29th and develop the The tanl Although th Prokhorovk managed to cent 5th Gu a rifle divisi to the 5th G Rotmist ing the righ