

Krasnaya Niva issue # 41, 1927, thrice-monthly magazine, organ of the USSR Central Executive Committee, Moscow.

Measures 11 1/2" x 8 3/4", 24 pp. excluding the cover. Printed on thin but high-quality paper. Only the cover has color graphics presenting reproductions of paintings exhibited in Moscow museums. All graphics on the internal pages are b/w. Two staples provide binding.

Overall, in very good condition. The cover shows a small separation at the bottom along the fold, not reaching the binding staples which are both tight and just a little rusted. The paper is still quite supple, uniformly and lightly age-toned. The text and graphics are bright and clear.

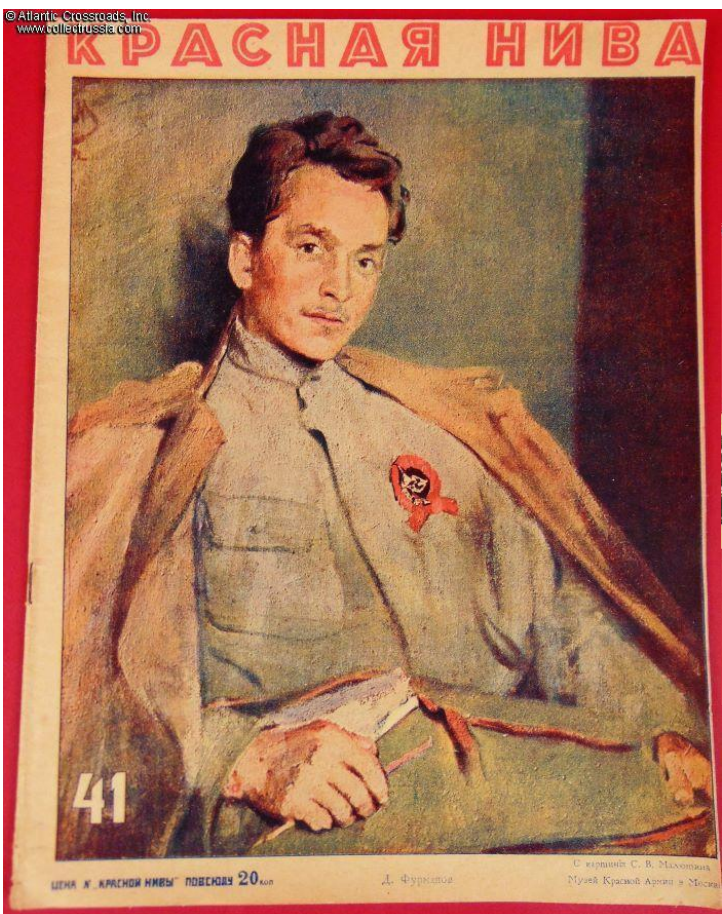

This issue's focus is tri-fold: (1) raising funds for the state by a variety of means, from sales of badges to lottery; (2) achievements of the fledgling Soviet aviation, and (3) Soviet women.

Being an organ of the executive branch of the Soviet government, the magazine's main focus is on the day-to-day life and achievements of Soviet industry and agriculture, and propaganda of the heroic efforts of workers and peasants to increase their output. There is a high number of advertisements on the inside of the cover, underscoring normalcy of the day-to-day life of the Soviet people.
