

Small poster with Stalin's portrait and his quote about WW2, circa 1945.

Measures 11 3/4" x 9 1/4". Decorated in the style of WW2 era military citations and honorary certificates. The photo is a print off Stalin's photo making a speech at a meeting, most likely a Congress of Communist Party of the Soviet Union. The wording on top reads "The great leader of the Party and people is reporting to the people about the deeds and plans of the Party." Below the portrait is Stalin's quote, reading "The war set up something like a test to our Soviet state, our government, our communist party, and summarized the results, as if telling us: here they are, your people and organizations, their actions and days, - take a close look at them, and reward them according to their deeds."

In excellent condition. The paper has a few barely noticeable wrinkles along the edges, and that is the entire extent of the wear visible to the naked eye. The colors are vibrant, the text and graphics are crisp and clear.

Please note that the pen in our photo is for size reference.
