

Porcelain Figurine of a Young Woman Admiring a Traditional Ukrainian Donut-Shaped Decanter, by Polonnoe Factory of Artistic Ceramics, 1956-73.

The statuette stands 7" tall, hand-painted, maker marked on the bottom (fig. # 567 in Volume One of Marks on Soviet Porcelain, Faience, and Majolica, 1917-1991 by Nasonova et al).

In excellent condition. A couple of minuscule scratches to the skirt in the back (shown in our photo) are not very obvious or detractive.

Polonnoe ("Polonne" in Ukrainian) is a city in the Khmelnytsky region in western Ukraine. The history of the city dates back to the year 998. The porcelain manufacturing is somewhat younger, dating back only to the 1880s. Economic difficulties of early post-Soviet years forced the factory into bankruptcy in 2011. Their legacy is alive thanks to the Khmelnytsky Regional Museum.

Please note that the penny in our photo is for size reference.
