

Gatchina Arsenal. One Hundred Objects from the Collection of Russian Emperors , 2001.

Large format measuring 9" x 11 ¼", in hard cover with a dust jacket; 207 pp. Published by the Atlant Publishers, St. Petersburg. Russian and English text. The catalog is printed on luxury heavy-stock coated semi-gloss paper which dampens the glare from the light and provides an excellent viewing experience. The photo illustrations are in high resolution, showing the minutest details of the artwork and craftsmanship of the weapons.

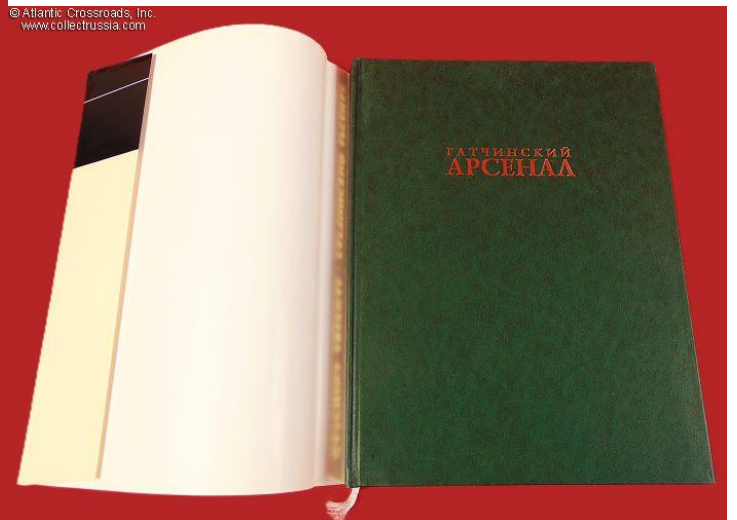

In excellent, superb condition. The only wear is a small tear to the dust jacket next to the head of the spine on the back side.

This arsenal was originally the work of count Grigory Orlov, a Russian Army officer who was the leader of the coup d'état which ascended Catherine the Great to the throne of the Russian Empire. An avid collector, Orlov traveled across Russia and abroad selecting the most magnificent hunting weapons. Made for noblemen, each piece was technically perfect and had great artistic value. The gems of this collection are ornate weapons manufactured in Dresden in the 16th century by craftsmen who represented the highest standards of the era. This book is a unique opportunity to study these fascinating weapons in detail.
